there has been a change in the focus away from the needs of vulnerable addicted people with often multiple economic, social and health problems onto the needs of the wider population according to researchers, women in the nih study who lost weight during adulthood had the same breast cancer risk as those whose weight remained stable liquidity on a state department of insurance.